

CORONER'S JURY HOLDS ARRWINE FOR GRAND JURY

Verdict Says Rempfer Girl
Was Shot by Man,
Nov. 13th

MAY POSTPONE CASE

Trial Not Likely to Come Up at December Term of Court

DOYLESTOWN, Dec. 3.—“We find that Frances Rempfer came to her death from a wound caused by a .32-calibre pistol fired by Charles Arwine in Double Woods and we recommend that he be held for the next term of Criminal Court of Bucks County on the charge of murder.”

The above is the verdict brought in by a coroner's jury following an inquest into the death of the Newtown girl who Arwine confessed murdering in a suicide pact. According to the confession the murder was committed early on the morning of November 13th, when the girl was first missed from the home of her parents.

The case will now be presented to the grand jury convening Monday and it is believed an indictment will be speedily returned.

There is some doubt that the case will be tried at the December term of criminal court. Many believe it will be held over until the February term. J. Leslie Kilcoyne, Arwine's counsel, plans to apply for a postponement because he needs more time to prepare a defense and believes that public opinion at the present time would not guarantee Arwine a fair trial.

At the coroner's inquest in the office of Justice of the Peace W. C. Hohenack, the coroner's jury returned the verdict.

Arwine was brought from the Doylestown jail handcuffed to Trooper Harold Dando, of the Morrisville barracks, and County Detective Anthony Russo. He was well dressed in a neat blue suit and seemed pleased at being out of jail. He smoked several cigarettes and smiled and posed for photographers, but was silent during the entire inquest.

Dr. John J. Sweeney, coroner of Bucks County, conducted the inquest and the only witness was Russo, who testified that he had his first connection with the case when he was called on the complaint of the slain girl's parents that she was missing, that he was present when her body was found in Double Woods, that he attended the autopsy and was present when Arwine confessed the slaying.

At the end of Russo's testimony, Kilcoyne declined to question him. The jury went out and returned immediately to render its verdict. The whole inquest took only seven minutes.

The coroner's jury was made up of A. Newlin Hellyer, foreman; Russell B. Gulick, Paul Moyer, William K. Fryling, Harry B. Blair and Andrew Schott.

Edward G. Biester, assistant commonwealth attorney, attended the inquest on behalf of the State.

Daniel J. Harkins Dies Suddenly; Stricken at Work

Daniel J. Harkins, 32, 628 Race street, was fatally stricken late yesterday afternoon while working about his place in the rear of the yard.

Harkins was associated with his father and brother in the junk business and was working in the rear of the yard about five o'clock yesterday afternoon when he suddenly dropped to the ground. It is believed that he suffered a heart attack. He was found lying upon the ground by Miss Bella McGee, who summoned assistance. A physician was called and Mr. Harkins died about 20 minutes later.

The deceased is survived by his wife, Marie; three sons, three daughters; father, two sisters and two brothers.

He was a member of Ancient Order of Hibernians.

The deceased was a native of Bristol, son of Peter and the late Ellen Harkins. He resided here all his life.

M. E. CONFERENCE PLANNED

Phila., Dec. 3.—The annual Philadelphia M. E. Conference will be held in Coatesville on April 25th in all probability, instead of June as agreed at the last conference. A special meeting will be asked at the Preachers' Conference here Monday and the approval of Bishop E. Richardson, of the Philadelphia area. The change of the meeting date will be acted upon later. Widespread protest that June would be inconvenient because of the heat, caused the consideration of the new date.

SILENT ON DEBT CUT

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—Overwhelming opposition by Congress to any postponement, reduction or cancellation of the European war debts left President Hoover today with the knotty problem of replying to the French and British notes in such a manner as not to aggravate still further a delicate situation. Administration officials maintained tight-lipped silence as to whether Mr. Hoover will recommend to Congress the postponement of the December 15th payment, pending a review of the whole war debt structure. Whether he does or not, congressional opinion is fixed and seemingly immovable.

Leaders, without regard to party or faction, as well as the rank and file, are a unit against any postponement, reduction or cancellation. The French note in particular solidified congressional opposition for France possesses almost as much gold as the United States and members of Congress considered it “ridiculous” to contend the French payment of only $19,000,000 would seriously cripple French finances.

CRITICALLY HURT IN AUTO CRASH

Norristown, Dec. 3.—James Berulis, 22, Pittston, was critically injured today when the automobile in which he was riding swerved a parked truck near Unionville. The injured man with six companions was en route to Philadelphia for the Army and Navy football game. Berulis is in Montgomery County Hospital suffering from a possible fracture of the skull, and a badly injured right eye which physicians say will have to be removed. The car was driven by H. Babcock, 21, of Tunkhannock. The other occupants included five men from West Chester.

FATALLY BURNED

Vineland, N. J., Dec. 3.—Falling with a lighted candle in her hand while alone in her home here, Mrs. W. J. Hiles, 80 years old, was fatally burned. She died early today in Newcomb Hospital where she had been rushed by Norman Randall, a neighbor who was attracted by her screams of pain. Randall was severely burned in extinguishing the flames.

LOTTERY TRIAL TO JURY

New York City, Dec. 3.—The Federal lottery trial of Conrad H. Mann, Kansas City business man and former head of the Eagles, and his three co-defendants, was placed in the hands of the jury today after a charge by Judge Frank J. Coleman, which was concluded at 10:30 a. m. today. During his charge, Judge Coleman lauded the co-operation and speed of the trial which he had received from the opposing attorney.

THREE MAIN SUBJECTS BEFORE LEGISLATURE

Education, Prohibition and Blue Laws Will Have To Be Considered

ARE LIKE SORE THUMBS

(This is the fourth of a series of stories dealing with the probable Pennsylvania legislative program.)

By Joseph A. Loftis
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
HARRISBURG, Dec. 3.—(INS)—Education, prohibition, blue laws—

Like sore thumbs, these will prominently protrude from a heap of measures to vex Pennsylvania's Assemblymen when social legislation takes its place on the calendar next month.

Public instruction, of course, is equally significant as an economic issue as it is a social subject. Reforms in both categories appear to be on their way. With approximately 48% of the general fund budget going toward education, that department's appropriation has been made an object of attack by those agitating for economy.

A legislative committee and an education department committee will present, jointly or severally, proposals for revising the school laws. Dr. James N. Rile, superintendent of public instruction, will sponsor departmental reductions which include a general 10% slash in teachers' salaries and a moratorium on increments until economic conditions improve.

One of the chief objectives of Dr. Rile and the commission for the study of educational problems, however, will be a realignment of school districts to effect the community unit of administration. Through consolidation, scores of districts of less than 1,000 population would be abolished.

BUSINESS FUTURE RESTS WITH LEADERS

Selection of President-Elect's
Cabinet of Utmost Importance

THINKS COL. L. P. AYRES

By James L. Kilgallen
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
(Copyright, 1932, by I. N. S.)

CLEVELAND, O., Dec. 3.—(INS)—America's business future now rests largely in the hands of the political leaders, in the opinion of Col. Leonard P. Ayres, vice-president of the Cleveland Trust Company, and one of the foremost authorities on economics in the country.

“What happens to business in the next year will depend primarily upon what the government does,” said Colonel Ayres in an interview today. He explained he meant how much sagacity and resourcefulness is shown and the degree of promptness with which the nation's pressing problems are met.

“The selection of President-elect Roosevelt's cabinet he characterized as ‘of utmost business importance.’”

Ayres said the principal problems confronting the new administration, in the order of importance, are:

“1. Balancing the budget.

“2. An arrangement of some sort of war debts.

“3. Taxation. The nature of the tax changes in respect not only to the money to be derived but the business that will be leaned upon.

“4. Problems centering around business (including possible changes in the Eighteenth Amendment).

“5. The group of veterans' relief problems.

“6. The whole railroad situation which, in some respects, is the most acute of our domestic problems.”

Colonel Ayres said it takes a “political prophet” rather than an economist to foresee what is in store for business.

He did not think the changing of administrations would tend to retard economic recovery. There might be “a mild hesitation” on the part of a small number of business men of the type who wait “to see what will happen.”

Burlington Girl, 3, Drowns In An Old Sewage Tank

BURLINGTON, N. J., Dec. 3.—Falling through thin ice that covered sewage in an abandoned tank of the filtration system at the municipal sewer plant in West Burlington, yesterday afternoon, Helen Waskich, 3, Shadeland avenue, was drowned. Three young companions endeavored to summon help but assistance did not arrive in time.

The body was later recovered by police and physicians worked in vain for two hours to revive her.

The child's mother, Mrs. Stanley Waskich returned home from a hospital following the birth of another daughter, as Helen, unnoticed, wandered to the old sewer station with two other children of the neighborhood.

The tank had been abandoned when the new sewer plan was put into operation and a wooden fence which formerly surrounded it had been torn down by residents of the vicinity, who burned the wood. Due to a break in the main plant a few days ago the old tank had to be pressed into service. The accumulated sewage had frozen over the top and the children were playing upon this thin ice.

ELKS TO PAY TRIBUTE TO DECEASED MEMBERS

Bristol Lodge to Hold Ritualistic Services Tomorrow
Afternoon

NATIONAL BROADCAST

Ritualistic services in memory of members of Bristol Lodge of Elks who died during the past year, will be held in the lodge rooms tomorrow afternoon at three o'clock.

Those whose memories will be honored are the following:

Jacob M. Winder, William M. Downing, Albert Wunsch, Sherwood A. Lynch, Samuel T. Valentine, and Thomas H. Snelson.

With George M. Cohan, master of ceremonies, Grand Exalted Ruler Floyd E. Thompson giving a short memorial address, orchestra numbers under the direction of B. A. Rolfe and Clarence Whitehill of the Metropolitan Opera as soloists, the Elks' nationwide broadcast on Sunday night, December 4th, at 10:30 o'clock over the Columbia circuit station W. C. A. U. and WIP-WFAN, bids fair to be one of the outstanding musical programs of the season.

The broadcast will be directed by George M. Cohan, America's most popular actor and playwright and a member of the Brooklyn Lodge of Elks. Every doughboy who marched to the inspiring tune of “Over There” will remember George M. Cohan.

Among other features of the musical program will be an orchestra under the direction of B. A. Rolfe, who is well known to radio listeners as the leader of the famous B. A. Rolfe orchestra which has been on important air programs for several years, the Queensborough Long Island Elks' Glee Club and vocal solos by Clarence Whitehill, one of America's most popular opera stars.

The eleven o'clock toast will be given by the Hon. Joseph T. Fanning, past grand exalted ruler of the order, who is credited as being one of the most influential factors in building the Order of Elks to its present great membership of more than 700,000.

The Elks' memorial service is an annual event which is held in 1500 Elks' clubs throughout the country. The nation-wide broadcast on Sunday, December 4th, is under the direction of the lodge activities committee of the grand lodge of the order.

Seven Drivers Working For Contractor Fined

LANGHORNE, Dec. 3.—Fines totaling $175 were imposed on seven drivers employed by Charles Bristow, contractor on the new highway through Bucks County, after it was discovered that one set of registration tags were being used for two vehicles.

Corporal McAfee, of the Langhorne State Highway Patrol, also charged that the trucks had not been inspected in his complaint to Justice of the Peace Edward Beister, of Trexore. Work on the project was temporarily held up while the trucks were being inspected, but Bristow's troubles did not end there, for he was warned that if his trucks did not stop dropping mud and clay along the roads by tonight, the drivers would be arrested on a charge of littering the highway.

SIXTY-FIVE HEAR HAROLD GREEN IN ACADEMY LECTURE

Travel Club Sponsors Trip To Academy of Natural Science

SEE ANIMAL GROUPS

Journeys to Africa Recounted; Pictures Also Shown

Assembling in the lecture room of the Academy of Natural Science, Philadelphia, yesterday afternoon, 65 Bristol residents listened to a thrilling and instructive talk by Harold Green, a member of the Academy, who told of his trips to Africa, and showed colored slides and motion pictures.

The party comprised members of the Bristol Travel Club, which organization sponsored the journey, members of their families, and friends.

The purpose of Mr. Green's trips with his party to Africa was to secure material and ideas for natural settings for animal groups now being set up in the Academy in Philadelphia. Three groups were arranged for during the long jaunt: the very rare sable-coated antelopes; lions; and a water-hole group, including antelope, gazelles, zebras, etc.

Slides, in most attractive tints, were first shown, then followed a detailed account of the trip.

The party landed in Portuguese Angola, on the west coast of Africa. This section is exceptionally arid, rain falling approximately once in five years along the coast. But an excellent supply of fresh water was made possible by drilling of artesian wells. An automobile was secured in which to carry equipment inland as far as there were roadways. When one large stream was reached it was necessary to transport the party and equipment in native canoes, great care being exercised in order to avoid any upsets, as the water was infested with large crocodiles.

From this point the journey was made on foot to haunts of the sable-coated antelope. When traces of these animals were found they were tracked to their haunts. The setting in which the antelopes were found was photographed from all angles, grasses and leaves collected for specimens, detailed notes made of the stones in the location, vegetation, the trees and their barks, etc. Many specimens were brought back to be reproduced, while in some instances impressions were taken of leaves, etc.

Across Africa the party then went on foot until the railroad route was reached, where they entrained for Naria to enter the Belgian Congo. In the Congo ideas and pictures were secured for the group of lions which are to be mounted, and the water-hole group. A “blind” was erected at the water-hole, from which vantage point photographs were taken, and the types of animals studied. Sketches were made of the hole and the surroundings, and models of the animals fashioned. Then some of the animals were killed and the skins sent to the United States accompanied by sketches of the position in which they were to be mounted. From the miniature models of the groupings made while the party was on location, enlarged backgrounds will be painted, and animals mounted accordingly.

Motion pictures shown by Mr. Green to the party, were taken by another member of the Academy on a recent trip to Africa. Lions were shown in playful mood. It was explained that game is so plentiful that it is possible for man to approach the lions. It was frequently found necessary to chase some with stones, when the group became too large to photograph. The lions were found to travel in groups as high as 16 in number.

Mr. Green told the Bristolians of the tsetse fly which infests some regions, while other sections where conditions are exactly the same, not a fly of this type is to be found. “There seems to be some kind of a barrier between certain regions, which no one can explain,” he told. The party was taken through the shops and workrooms at the Academy, and the vast difference shown between the old style of mounting animals and the new.

In speaking of Africa as a whole, the lecturer informed that Angola is known as bush-land, underbrush being exceedingly dense, with great danger of one losing his way. Local guides were secured, and individuals never left the camp without the guide. In the Congo section where the lions were found there were found to be plains, then sections where trees grew similar to those in an orchard, forests and underbrush being nil in that territory.

DIVERTING "GAS" TAXES

Willingness of the great fraternity of motor-vehicle owners to pay taxes on the gasoline they consume is accounted for, of course, by their interest in the extension and maintenance of good roads. But the fact that they bear the levy without squawking and that it is collected with a minimum of expense and trouble is steadily tempting lawmakers to increase the burden and also to divert the proceeds to other than highway uses.

One by one the states have been adding to their gasoline levies and breaking their gentlemen's agreement with the motorists that since the tax is a special tax on them the revenue would be used for their special purposes. The need for emergency funds for unemployment relief and budget balancing have provided the inevitable entering wedge.

There is such a thing as diminishing returns, such a thing as getting a tax so high that consumption of the taxed commodity will decrease. The rule applies in the case of gasoline.

Good judgment should prompt careful consideration before giving motorists so good an excuse for rebelling against impositions as is presented by diversion of the gas tax to other than highways and upkeep. They are a powerful body and could make trouble if they reached the conclusion that they were not getting a square deal.

But now that the ice has been broken the highway users may well expect a permanent tap in the gas tax funds. No end of "emergencies" may be expected.

AMERICAN SCHOOLS BEST

Few American boys and girls are denied a high school education because of a lack of such schools. There are large sparsely settled areas without high schools but the number of boys and girls affected is small.

Texas has 1400 high schools, Ohio, 1332, and Pennsylvania 1185. But the daily attendance of Pennsylvania's high schools is 500,000 in excess of the other two states.

It is clear why no state can be judged by the number of its schools. Densely settled states of comparatively small area have fewer but larger schools. States like Texas where "distances are longer" need more but smaller schools.

Consolidation of schools is rapidly reducing the number of schools in some states. Many small rural schools are being consolidated into one big modern and complete school with buses bringing them within the daily reach of every school child.

Economies should be effected by consolidation to help pay for the highways which make consolidation possible.

Wilkins on his trip to the North Pole on the ill-fated Nautilus, and Lieutenant Adams, who was with Byrd at the South Pole, were also brought to Bristol by Mr. Runyan. Wrestling and boxing bouts have been staged here by him, and several times he has brought the group of champion tumblers from Hermann's Physical Training Institute, of Philadelphia, to furnish entertainment for the members of the association.

In the years to come his administration will be remembered for its promotion of sociability, its ability to hold and interest the members and as a period of great achievements and accomplishments. Mr. Runyan can retire from the office with a consciousness that the duties imposed upon him have been well and faithfully performed, and can turn over to his successor, an organization that is functioning successfully, with an enthusiastic and united membership that is looking hopefully into the future for the opportunity to perform even greater achievements.

combat the "color blindness" of those who might choose to adopt an indifferent attitude toward anti-blue law legislation. The battle is one of long standing, and opponents of the 1794 act, undaunted by repeated failures in the assembly, have organized for another strenuous campaign.

The Pennsylvania Federation of Sportsmen's Clubs, representing units in 16 western Pennsylvania counties with total memberships of 200,000, has raised its voice for repeal of the blue laws. An intensive drive to enlist further organized support has been under way for several weeks.

Similarly, anti-prohibitionists have declared war anew upon the Snyder-Armstrong law, Pennsylvania's enforcement act. It is common knowledge that modification of the Volstead act automatically would give Pennsylvania beer of the same alcoholic content as Congress decrees in the Federal statute. Tampering with the Snyder-Armstrong act is thus technically superfluous.

Wets, nevertheless, promise as a matter of principle to renew their siege to wash prohibition off the Commonwealth books. Beyond eradication of the Snyder-Armstrong act, anti-prohibitionists see the necessity for laws to control liquor traffic in the event the Eighteenth Amendment is repealed. The Legislature, they believe, can not possibly escape liquor legislation if Federal repeal appears while the assembly is still in session.

SYNOPSIS

Young Dr. John Wolfe arrives at the quaint town of Little Navestock to become Dr. Thredgold's assistant. Though shabby of dress, the young doctor's bearing commands respect. Dr. Thredgold is very affable but his wife, who judges from outward appearances, considers Wolfe a "raw gawk of a man" and treats him coolly. Sir George Griggs arrives with a dislocated shoulder. He is infuriated over Dr. Thredgold's clumsy treatment and turns to young Wolfe who skillfully sets the shoulder. Later, Dr. Thredgold tells his wife that Wolfe has some ability but is a little forward. Dr. Thredgold attends the prosperous patients and assigns his assistant to the poor section of town. The young physician realizes the pitiable plight of these people in the hands of a bungling doctor. He is shocked at the unsanitary conditions in the alleys and starts an investigation. Dr. Thredgold, ignorant of this, is well satisfied with his assistant, and Mrs. Thredgold now considers him a very passable person.

CHAPTER NINE

It was on a March day that a message came in from Moor Farm on the northern edge of Tarring Moor. Dr. Thredgold was out, and Wolfe at work in the dispensary making up physic. The maid took Mrs. Mascall's note to Mrs. Thredgold, who exerted her jurisdiction in such matters when Dr. Thredgold was absent. She was, Mrs. Thredgold had a shrewd knowledge of the neighborhood, and had an experienced finger for the pulse of the local pride. To send an understrapper into certain houses would be an act of indecent folly. Mrs. Thredgold decided that Wolfe could deal with the case in question. Mrs. Mascall was a fat, good-tempered old person. Montague could drive up to Moor. And the Mascalls were abominably healthy.

"Sykes, take this note to Mr. Wolfe, and tell him to attend to it at once."

"Yes, ma'am."

And Wolfe had his orders.

Thredgold kept a spare horse for his assistant's use, and since the animal had been broken to both saddle and trap, Wolfe, who preferred the saddle to the little old black-and-yellow-wheeled gig, rode out for Tarring Moor. It was a clear, still afternoon, and Navestock lay like a toy town in the valley below. The Lombardy poplars beyond Josiah Crabbe's house at the end of West Street looked like the stiff wooden trees from a child's Noah's ark. Wolfe passed Beech Hill, Turrell the brewer's pretentious battlemented house. It was a great white building set in the midst of beautifully kept grass and splendid trees, but the house reminded Wolfe of a fat man in a white waistcoat. The windows of Beech Hill, overlooked Navestock town, and Wolfe wondered whether Jasper Turrell realized how his tenants lived down by the river. The Turrells were ostentatious people. The brewer made a boast of everything that belonged to Beech Hill, but no one would have mentioned Bung Row at his dinner-table. In all probability very few of the local gentry remembered that such a place as Bung Row existed.

Moor Farm was a group of red-brick, red-tiled buildings set on the first ridge-spur of Tarring Moor. It was a grazing farm, and its grasslands swept in green slopes towards the valley of the Wraith. A white gate opened into the home paddock, where geese gaggled and a fat, brown pony nosed the grass. The house faced the south, with orchard and garden ground gathered about it, the byres, barns, and cattle lodges standing towards the north. Two huge cypresses grew in the garden in front of the house, their dusky spires visible for miles above the outlines of the moor.

Moor Farm itself was a long, low house with casement windows, stone mullions, and a great, brick porch. A mellow and homely solidity possessed it. Standing within a stone's throw of the wild and primitive moor, it threw back the south-west wind from its walls and roof, and glimmered its casements in the sunlight. Holly hedges, eight feet high and a yard thick, stood squarely round the orchard and the garden. A brick terrace ran along the front of the house, with grass below it that was kept sleek and smooth.

Wolfe whistled to a boy, who was carrying a bucket across the paddock, and the youngster ran to hold the doctor's horse. A path paved with rough stone slabs led to the porch. Moss and grass grew between the stones, and in one place the roots of one of the cypresses had lifted the flags. There were flower borders under the house, full of old-fashioned black velvet and old gold polyanthus, Lent lilies, and London pride. The date 1678 was carved on a stone let into the brick face of the porch.

Wolfe had his hand on the iron bell-pull when the oak door swung open, and he found himself looking into the eyes of a tall girl whose black hair fell over her shoulders. Lithe, dark, and alert, she had come sailing down the broad oak stairs, hair flying, brown eyes full of a glitter of haste.

The door was hardly open when Wolfe saw the girl's face change its expression. There was a mobility about her that was quick and free as the sunlight over the moor. "I thought Dr. Thredgold—Are you a doctor?"

"I am Dr. Thredgold's assistant."

The girl had no self-consciousness. She was an intense and rather passionate young person, whose pale face radiated an impetuous sincerity. She looked at Wolfe with unkept one hand on the edge of the door.

"We sent for Dr. Thredgold—"

"Dr. Thredgold was out. I came to see if I could be of any use."

The girl's eyes looked into Wolfe's eyes. For the moment she appeared to challenge him, and to stand waiting at the doorway for her intuition. Wolfe looked back at her with a frankness that did not intend to suffer a repulse.

"It is Mrs. Mascall who is ill, is it not?"

The girl still seemed to be waiting for some decisive impression.

"Yes."

"I have left my horse at the gate. If you prefer to wait three or four hours I can ride back to Navestock and send Dr. Thredgold over."

She looked at him fixedly. There was the faintest glimmer of amusement in the man's eyes.

"That sounds silly."

"It does, doesn't it?"

She began to smile.

"You know—I felt—"

"Of course you did."

"Dr. Thredgold's young—his assistants—"

"Young fools—shall we say!"

"I never meant that—"

"Say fools and we will shake hands on it."

She stepped back with a frank, girlish laugh and let him in. Impetuosity was part of her nature. She was a moor child, bred to galloping ponies and the rush of the wind.

"I'll run up and tell mother. Oh, I say, what's your name?"

"Wolfe."

The quip took them at the same moment.

"Wolfe! Well, I did my best!"

"I'm a tame one. People don't trouble to slam the door."

FASHION'S EYES ARE CENTERED ON DOTTED VEIL FOR THE BERETS

By ALICE LANGELEIR
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
PARIS, Dec. 3.—(INS)—Fashion's eye is on the little dotted veil this season which was brought out chiefly to bring afternoon distinction to the popular little beret. An American actress is responsible for the very newest manner of wearing the new little eye-veil. It goes over a curious little oblong shaped short brimmed hat, just covering the forehead.

Very new as well is the veil of finest mesh that is doubled and attached to the hat a short distance from the centre-front at either side, so that it falls in a short swathed droop over the eyes. It is particularly smart over the new "Manet" shape, with a fairly high crown that is square and short brim slightly turned up all the way round. A felt bow is set near the top of the crown towards one side, surmounting a crystal quill.

There are many points of fashion when it comes to the newest bonnets appearing at the smart modistes these days. Points in velvet and felt protrude back, front or sides of the newest millinery. A black felt model has a neat little point of the material at the side with a shining metal pin drawn through the folded front drape. A wing of black velvet asserts itself in a point at the back of a black and white velvet hat.

Saucy little "pork-pie" hats are perched on many pretty heads these days, reminding one of the Naughty Nineties. Turned up all around and trimmed with a tuft of feathers these dainty little shapes are tipped over the forehead leaving the sides and back of the head uncovered. This may be the beginning of long locks again.

COLUMBANS GET TIGHT GRIP ON FIRST PLACE

The Columbans took undisputed possession of first place in the A. O. H. Basketball League last night by defeating the Shamrocks, 24-19. In the other game played the Gaels nosed out the Celtics, 2-2. Both frays were played on the Hibernians' floor.

The battle for first place between the Columbans and the Shamrocks was interesting from start to finish and was not decided until the closing minutes of the tilt. The "Columbos" have now won three games and lost one, while the "Shams" and Gaels are tied for second with two wins and two defeats.

Despite the playing of "Billy" Thompson, the Gaels, led by "Giege" Dougherty and Gene Lawler, managed to eke out a win over the Celtics. Thompson's scoring of nine points kept the "Celts" in the game, but could not defeat the fast-stepping Gaels.

CROYDON A. C. WILL PLAY NORTH PARK TEAM

CROYDON, Dec. 3.—According to an announcement issued at the club house of the Croydon A. C. the grid-iron eleven of that aggregation will play a post season game on Eddington Field tomorrow when they will meet the North Park gridgers. The game is scheduled for the usual hour of 2.30 o'clock.

Despite injuries which caused Croydon to cancel other games, Coach Abe Stiles stated that he would have a fast team on the field. The backfield will be made up of Schwarz, Lefty Crossley, Hughes, Lake and there is a possibility that Stet Crossley will return to action after being out with an injured knee.

The line will be just as stalwart as ever with Conn, English, James, Fields, Kutzer, Irvin, Collins, MacDonald and several other regulars in their positions.

While the North Park team is light they are reputed to be fast and much aerial work may form the offensive of both squads.

Croydon may play one more game after this one, the announcement at the club house revealed. Just who the opponents would be was not ascertained.

ARMY WILL TRY TO SINK NAVY TODAY

By Davis J. Walsh
(I. N. S. Sports Editor)
PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 3.—(INS)—Up the street came the brisk tap-tap of the high French heel, the thump of the Army brogan, the beat of the black "issue" boot, 75,000 of them and all on a common errand. They were only feet but they knew where they were going. They were on their way to Franklin Field to the Army and Navy game this afternoon, the annual whoop-de-do of football, an affair of legend and gallantry and gold braid, with something of the Belasco touch. You see one of them, you see all. They're cut to a pattern and made to the form but the eye is never so jaded that it fails to quicken to the illusion of the thing. It's an old show, in fact, yet always new and this one ought to be good.

For the first time since the immortal tie in Chicago six years ago, the Navy had a fighting chance and it is tradition at Annapolis that no Navy man could ask for more. They've won only two out of eight games this year but they're coming on, whereas the Army was rated among the best in the East before last Saturday and the Notre Dame disaster and today it was just another football team, a natural favorite for this game but not a prohibitive one.

As a matter of fact, it was pretty much anybody's ball game and so a great deal of the fervor of the old vendetta was returned to the event in consequence, with every ticket sold, the speculators reaping a rich harvest, 79,000 looking on and the world and its four corners listening in.

It has everything. It even has a touch of pathos, thanks to the definite announcement that it will be Major Sasse's last game as coach of Army football, and there were further possibilities along this line in connection with Mr. "Rip" Miller, who has not beaten the Army in two attempts and might not be granted a third.

The weather was reasonably mild, though threatening.

The game will go on at one o'clock, eastern time, with the complete personnel of the two academies on opposite sides of the field.

Anything can happen in this series and the records show that a lot of things have. They even show that, regardless of the eleven-year famine, the Army only leads in victories by 17 to 12, and certainly nothing that happens in Notre Dame's victories against the two teams would indicate that the Navy cannot win today. It has the courage. It has the confidence. It even has the Notre Dame system. But, unfortunately, it isn't the system that counts. It's the men who play it.

ST. ANN'S WILL BE IDLE DURING THIS WEEK-END

(By T. M. Juno)
Due to the failure of the Croydon management to carry out an agreement with the St. Ann's A. A. football team, the Bristol club will remain idle this week-end.

The "Saints" were originally scheduled to meet the Croydon A. A. regardless of their outcome of the game with the Bristol A. A. team. Early this week the Croydon management notified the St. Ann's team that because of injuries they would have to cancel their remaining games. This reason was accepted by the St. Ann's manager.

Later the Croydon management booked another game to fill in the game left over by the cancelling of the Bristol team.

What Makes All-Americans?

By HARDIN BURNLEY

WHAT MAKES AN ALL-AMERICAN GRID STAR—ABILITY OR PUBLICITY?

UTAH'S GREAT FULLBACK FRANK CHRISTENSEN WOULD BE A SURE-FIRE ALL-AMERICAN IF HE WERE ON A MORE FAMOUS ELEVEN!

"Dutch" CLARK

FORMER COLORADO COLLEGE ACE, WHO STARRED THIS YEAR WITH THE PORTSMOUTH PRO GRID TEAM—HE HAD TO WAIT UNTIL HE BECAME A PRO BEFORE HE WAS RECOGNIZED AS ONE OF THE BEST BACKS OF MODERN TIMES!

EVERY year about this time the all-American craze hits the country's football experts and near-experts. The question is, what makes a football player eligible for a position on the mythical team? A player may be a football genius, but if he has the misfortune to be playing on one of the college elevens which do not receive nation-wide publicity, his chances of making anybody's all-America eleven are practically nil. Long ago some football sage (I think it was Bob Zuppke) summed up the situation when he said that the most necessary requisites for an all-America halfback were a couple of high-powered press agents and some good interferences. It is an absolute fact that some of the highly ballyhooed grid stars are really inferior to not a few unsung football heroes, who never get their just deserts because they play on less celebrated elevens which don't go in for press agents. The truth of this statement can be proved by a glance at professional football. Time after time a highly touted all-American college star has been forced to take a back seat when he entered the "pro" ranks, while some unpublicized gridder from a more or less obscure college usurped the spotlight. For example, it is the contention of many football critics that the greatest football player of today is Earl "Dutch" Clark, star back of the Portsmouth professional footballers. Now Clark is one of those lads who got little or no recognition during his college days, simply because he attended one of the smaller colleges, far away from the beaten publicity paths. He was good enough at Colorado College a couple of years ago to be all-American hands down, had he attended some big football college; but the more publicized gridgers were selected for the mythical elevens, and as a result it was not until he turned pro that his real value became known. Out in the Rockies this year they have another great football player who would receive all-American consideration if players were selected on the basis of ability rather than publicity. His name is Frank Christensen, and he plays fullback on the Armstrong's classy Utah eleven. Those who have seen him play say he is a really great back, but just the same it will be some months before he is advertised as Brovel, Cain or Manders who will be the choice of the all-American selectors. But that's the way it goes. Copyright, 1932, King Features Syndicate, Inc.
